This is the story of Stellenbosch, Somerset West, Franschhoek, Paarl, Wellington and Tulbagh, which developed from lonely outposts of the Dutch East India Company into thriving communities. Remote but fertile valleys attracted adventurous settlers who tamed the seemingly indomitable area. The book outlines architectural features, traces the growth of Afrikaans and education, shows how religion and politics influenced development, and in particular, what the arrival of the Huguenots meant to the growth of these communities, the centres of the oldest wine route in the country.

Foreword by Prof. Robert Shell

ISBN: 978 0958495196

Cover: Paperback, gloss, full colour

Pages 132, colour

Rec. Retail Price 185.00 plus P&P

The book is not about the colourful houses, the cooking, music, minstrels or slavery – it is an attempt to achieve a greater understanding of the history of Bo-Kaap. It also attempts to discover how Islam and the first mosques helped to shape the community. The reader is taken on an exploratory walk from the city centre to Bo-Kaap, past the mosques, early homes and cemetery. Architectural features are noted. Subsequent chapters explain the basic tenets of Islam; the function of a mosque; the meaning of Sunni, Shafee and Sufism and the role played by the religious schools. The similarities between the three Abrahamic religions, Judaism, Christianity and Islam are highlighted. The arrival, growth and consolidation of the faith in the Cape are fully explained as well as the early history of the suburb's ten mosques. The book concludes with a chapter on customs, the Muslim calendar, a glossary and basic greetings.

BO-KAAP, das bunte Herz Kapstadts

Bo-Kaap, what is it? The name, to some, conjures up an image of a district of Cape Town with colourful houses, eastern cooking and music. In reality though, there is far more to Bo-Kaap and "Bo-Kaap, das bunte Herz Kapstadts" helps to explore this.

Firstly, who lives here today? Its earliest residents in the latter days of the 17th century were European tradesmen who could ill afford houses in the town centre; Later, some of these properties were purchased by Muslims which explains the present day, predominantly Muslim population whose ancestors came, mostly, from the east. The book explores the intolerant attitude of the Dutch authorities towards Islam which took root at the Cape through banishment and slavery. With the advent of their religious freedom, mosques were built and the book explains and describes their history, as well as the turbulent history of the Muslim burial ground, the differences or divisions within the Muslim faith which helped shape the people of Bo-Kaap.

The reader embarks on an exploratory walk through the architecturally fascinating Bo-Kaap, learns about Muslim customs, religious schools, the meaning of a mosque, the Islamic calendar and will learn some basic greetings through the glossary.
